Description- Shivani Kumari

Founder – Project Rihaai

Freedom Beyond Bail | Building Pathways to Freedom, Dignity and Rehabilitation.

Shivani Kumari is a social development professional and the Founder of Project Rihaai, an initiative working to address the financial, legal and social barriers that prevent economically disadvantaged individuals from accessing their freedom, even after being granted bail.

Her work is rooted in grassroots community engagement and years of experience working with incarcerated individuals and their families. Through her involvement in prison-based interventions, particularly in Tihar Jail, she has developed a deeper understanding of the challenges faced by individuals navigating the criminal justice system, as well as the difficulties their families encounter during and after incarceration.

Her experience in legal awareness, counselling, case coordination, community mobilisation and post-release rehabilitation has shaped her commitment to creating meaningful support systems for individuals who are often left behind due to poverty, limited resources and lack of access to institutional support.

The idea behind Project Rihaai emerged from a critical gap she witnessed in the justice and rehabilitation process: receiving a bail order does not always mean an individual can walk free. Many people continue to remain incarcerated because they cannot arrange the required surety, bond amount or other financial resources needed to complete their release formalities.

Driven by the belief that poverty should never become a barrier to freedom, Shivani founded Project Rihaai to bridge this gap. The initiative focuses on supporting economically vulnerable individuals who are unable to secure their release despite being granted bail, through financial assistance, legal coordination, resource mobilisation and community-based support.

For Shivani, the purpose of Rihaai extends beyond securing someone's release from prison. It is about restoring dignity, rebuilding family connections, facilitating social reintegration and creating opportunities for individuals to rebuild their lives with confidence and independence.

Through Project Rihaai, she envisions a more compassionate and inclusive support system where access to freedom is not determined by financial circumstances and every individual gets a fair opportunity to begin again.

Her vision is simple: No one should remain behind bars simply because they cannot afford their freedom.
