What is a Bail Bond?

In India, when someone is arrested and awaiting trial, the court may grant bail to allow them to remain free during the legal process. A bail bond typically involves a monetary or property guarantee to ensure that the court's conditions are met.

Urgency of the Situation

The backlog, overcrowding, and financial barriers are not just numbers — they represent human lives trapped in inhumane conditions, awaiting freedom that should have been granted.

- Prisoners who have legally completed the process for release continue to face extended incarceration due to unpaid bail.
- Overcrowding worsens the quality of life, health, and rehabilitation opportunities for all inmates.
- Families of prisoners endure prolonged suffering and socio-economic hardship.
- The justice system's credibility and fairness are undermined.

We aim to support underprivileged individuals who remain in jail even after being granted bail — only because they and their families cannot afford the required bail bond or surety amount. Many families struggle financially and are unable to arrange the money needed for their loved ones' release.

Our Support Approach

- Identify & verify eligible bail cases
- Assess genuine financial hardship
- Facilitate verified bail-related payment
- Support post-release family reintegration

About Project Rihaai

Project Rihaai is an initiative of TYCIA Foundation focused on helping undertrial prisoners who have already been granted bail by a court but remain incarcerated because they cannot afford the bail bond, surety or related costs required for their release.

This project facilitates need-based financial assistance toward verified bail-related requirements, helping eligible individuals return home and supporting their reintegration into society.

The Problem: Overcrowded Prisons & Distressed Prisoners

India's prison system faces a grave crisis of overcrowding and undue detention.

- India houses over 5.77 lakh prisoners as of 2025 estimates, with about 76% being undertrials (India Justice Report / NCRB).
- Many prisons operate well beyond their sanctioned capacity, with severe overcrowding reported across states.
- A significant number of undertrials — especially from financially weak families — remain in custody even after bail is granted, simply because they cannot pay.
